Dear Mr. Ashcroft:

It has come to my attention that the antitrust suit against Microsoft has reached a settlement as of November 2001.

It is my opinion that this settlement should be full and final.

One of the biggest complaints from Microsoft's competitors was that the Windows product had a complete monopoly within the computer makers industry. This settlement allows computer makers free reign over which software they choose without reprisals from Microsoft if a competitors product is chosen. I think that this fully addresses this issue fully.

It is time to bring this antitrust case to an end. Microsoft has offered good terms to its competitors and to the government. There can be no reason to prolong this case any further. Thank you.

Sincerely,

Paojeh Chu
